THE DRUNKARD.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Interior of a pretty rural Cottage—Flowers, paintings, &c.—Everything exhibits taste and simplicity—Table, with bible and arm-chair, R.—Table and chair, with embroidery frame, L.

MRS. WILSON discovered in arm-chair, R. — MARY seated by table, L.

MRS. W. It was in that corner, Mary, where your poor father breathed his last. This chair is indeed dear to me, for it was in this he sat the very day before he died. Oh! how he loved this calm retreat, and often, in his last illness, he rejoiced that the companion of his youth would close his eyes in these rural shades, and be laid in yon little nook beside him; but now——

MARY. Dear mother, it is true this sweet cottage is most dear to us; but we are not the proprietors. Old Mr. Middleton never troubled us much. But as our worthy landlord is no more, it is generally believed that our dear cottage will be sold.

MRS. W. Ah! It is that I fear; and when I think that you, my beloved child, will be left exposed to the thousand temptations of life—a penniless orphan! (a KNOCK C.D.) Hark! who knocks? Dry your tears, my darling. Come in.

Enter LAWYER CRIBBS, C.D.—comes down c.

—Good morning, Sir. Mary, my child, a chair.

CRIB, (sitting L.C.) Good morning, Mrs. Wilson—good morning, my dear young lady. A sad calamity has befallen the neighbourhood, my good Mrs. Wilson.

MRS. W. Many a poor person I fear will have reason to think so, Sir.

CRIB. Yes, yes—you are right. Ah! he was a good man, that Mr. Middleton, I knew him well. He placed great confidence in my advice.

MARY. Was he not very rich once, Mr. Cribbs?

CRIB. Yes, yes—when the times were good; but bad speculations, unlucky investments, false friends—alas, alas! we have all our ups and downs, my dear Madam.

MRS. W. Ah! Mr. Cribbs, I perceive you are a man who—CRIB. Has a heart to feel for the unfortunate. True, Madam, it is the character I have attained, though I am not the man to boast Have you any prospect of—— that is—have you provided——

MAST. It is true, then, too true—the cottage and garden will be sold?

CRIB. Why, what can the young man do, my dear? A gay young man like him,—fond of the world—given somewhat to excess, no doubt—giddy, wild, and reckless. As the good man says—"when I was a child, I thought as a child," (a pause—CRIBBS looks round the room) Well, Madam, business is business, I am a plain man, Mrs. Wilson, and sometimes called too blunt—and—and,—

MARY. You mean to say that we must leave the cottage, Sir?

CRIB. (pretending feeling) No, not yet, my dear young lady. I would say it is best to be prepared; and as Edward is midden in all his movements, and as my entreaties would never change him—why, if you could find a place before he moves in the matter, it might save you from much inconvenience, that's all.

MRS. W. You impose upon us a severe task, my dear Sir.

CRIB, Bear up, my dear Madam, bear up. If I may be so officious, I would try Boston—at the Intelligence Offices there, any healthy young woman, like your daughter, can obtain a profitable situation. Think of it, think of it, my good Madam. I will see you again soon; and now, heaven bless you!

Exit C.D., and off L.

Mrs. Wilson and Mary look for a moment at each other, and then embrace.

MRS. W. Well, comfort, my daughter, comfort. It is a good thing to have a friend in the hour of trouble. This Mr. Cripps appears to be a very feeling man; but before taking his advice, we would do well to make our proposed trial of this young man, Edward Middleton. You have the money in your purse?

MARY. It is all here, mother—Thirty dollars—the sum we have saved to purchase fuel for the winter.

MRS. W. That will partially pay the rent score. When this young man finds we are disposed to deal fairly with him, he may relent. You turn pale, Mary; what ails my child?

MARY. Dear mother, it is nothing—it will soon be over. It must be done; but I fear this young man. He has been described as so wild, so reckless. I feel a sad foreboding

MRS. W. Fear not, Mary. Call him to the door—refuse to enter the house—give him the money, and tell him your sad story. He must, from family and association at least, have the manners of a gentleman; and however wild a youth, may be when abroad among his associates, no gentleman ever insulted a friendless and unprotected woman.

MARY. You give me courage, dear mother. I should indeed be an unnatural child, if—— (aside) Yet I am agitated. Oh! why do I tremble thus? (puts on a village bonnet, &c.)

MRS. W. (kisses her) Go forth, my child—go as the dove flew from the ark of old, and! if thou shouldst fail in finding the olive branch of peace, return, and seek comfort where thou shalt surely find it—in the bosom of thy fond and widowed mother!

Exit H.D., and MARY C.D.

SCENE II.—Front and cut wood in c.

Enter CRIBBS, l.H.

CRIB. Well, that interview of mock sympathy and clarity is over, and I flatter myself pretty well acted too. Ha, ha! Yes, the widow and her child must quit the cottage—I'm resolved. First, for the wrongs I years ago endured from old Wilson; and secondly, it suits my own interests; and in all cases, between myself and others, I consider the last clause a clincher. Ha! here comes Edward—I will meet him. (goes off R. 1 E.)

Enter MARY, fearful and hesitating, L.

Mary. I have now nearly reached the old mansion house. In a few moments I shall see the young man, this dissipated collegian. Oh! my poor mother must be deceived! Such a man can have no pity for the children of poverty—misfortune's suppliants for shelter beneath the roof of his cottage. Oh, my poor mother! little do you know the sufferings that Ha! a gentleman approaches. My fears tell me this is the man I seek. Shall I ever have courage to speak to him? I will pause till he has reached the house, (retires R.)

Enter EDWARD MIDDLETON and CRIBBS, R. 1 E.

CRIB. I wished to see you with regard to the cottage and lands adjoining, I have an opportunity of selling them. When last we talked upon this subject

MARY. (appears at back c. listening)

EDW. I was then ignorant that a poor widow and her only daughter—

CRIB. Who are in arrears for rent

EDW. Had lived there many years—and that my father highly esteemed them. To turn them forth upon the world, in the present condition of the old lady

CRIB. Which old lady has a claim upon the Almshouse.

MARY, (shudders)

EDW. In short, Mr. Cribbs, I cannot think of depriving them of a home, dear to them as the apple of their eye—to send them forth from the flowers which they have reared, the vines which they have trained in their course—a place endeared to them by tender domestic recollections, and past remembrances of happiness.

CRIB. Oh! all that and more,—the fences which they have neglected—the garden gate off the hinges—the limbs of the old birch tree broken down for firewood—the back windows ornamented with an old hat

EDW. Cease, Mr. Cribbs; all this has been explained; my foster-brother, William, has told me the whole story. The trees were broken down by idle school-boys; and with regard to an old hut in the window, why, it was the hat of a man—can as much be said of you, Mr. Cribbs?

CRIB. You are pleased to be pleasant to-day, Sir. Good morning, Sir—good morning.

Exit L, muttering.

EDW. I'm sorry I offended the old man. After all, he was the friend of the family; though it is strange, my poor father almost always took his advice, and was invariably unfortunate when he did so.

Re-enter CRIBBS, L.

CRIB. Good morning again. Beg pardon, Sir. I now understand you better. You are right;--the daughter--fine girl, eh?--sparkling eyes, eh?—dimples, roguish glances! Ah! when I was young—eh? ah! well never mind. You have seen her eh?

EDW. Never explain yourself, Mr Cribbs.

CRIB. If you have not seen her, you will, you know, eh? I understand. Traps for wild fowl. Mother and daughter grateful—love passion—free access to the cottage at all hours.

EDW. Cribbs, do you know this girl has no father?

CRIB. That's it—a very wild flower growing on the open heath.

EDW. Have you forgotten that this poor girl has not a brother?

CRIB. A garden without a fence—not a stake standing. You have nothing to do but to step into it.

EDW. Old man! I respect your grey hairs. I know an old man once—peace to his ashes!—whose hair was as grey as yours; but beneath that aged breast there beat a heart, pure as the first throbs of childhood. He was as old as you—he was more aged; His limbs tottered, as yours do not,—I let you go in peace. But had that old man heard you utter such foul sentences to his son—had he heard you tell me to enter, like a wolf, this fold of innocence, and tear from her mother's arms the hope of her old age—he would have forgotten the winters that had dried the pith within his aged limbs, seized you by the throat, and dashed you prostrate to the earth, as too foul a carcass to walk erect and mock the name of man.

CRIB. But, Mr. Middleton, Sir

MARY, (rushes forward c, and kneels) The blessings of the widow and the fatherless be upon thee!—May they accompany thy voice to heaven's tribunal—not to cry for vengeance, but plead for pardon on this wicked man!

CRIB. Ha!—the widow's daughter! Mr. Middleton, you mistake me. I—I cannot endure a woman's tears. I—poor child! (aside) I'll be terribly revenged for this!

Exit L. 1 E

EDW. This, then, is the widow's child. Rise, my dear, and be assured of my sympathy for your mother's sorrows, and of my assistance in your need.

MARY. Oh, thanks for this cheering kindness!——But, Sir, I have an errand for you. This is part of the rent which (holding out money)
SCENE 3.] THE DRUNKARD.

EDW. Nay, then, you have not overheard my discourse with the old man who has just left us. I have told him——

MARY. That we should still remain in the cottage. Oh, Sir! is that a reason we should withhold from you your due—now paid with double pleasure, since we recognise a benefactor in our creditor? Take this, I entreat—’tis but a portion of the debt; but be assured, the remainder shall be paid, as soon as busy, willing hands can earn it.

EDW. Nay, nay, dear girl—keep it as a portion of your dowry.

MARY. Sir!

EDW. If you have overheard the dialogue that I just held with that old man, you must know that I sometimes speak very plain.

MARY. (apprehensively) Yes, Sir.

EDW. I have spoken plainly to him—shall I now speak plainly to you? MARY. Alas, Sir! It is not our fault that the fences are broken down. When my poor father lived, it was not so. But since---

EDW. When that vile old man spoke to me of your charms, I heeded him not. There are plenty of pretty girls in this section of the country; but I have since discovered what I had before heard, something more than the ordinary beauty which he described. A charm of mental excellence, noble sentiment, filial piety. These are the charms which bind captive the hearts of men. I speak plainly, for I speak honestly; and when I ask you to keep that money as a portion of your dowry, need I say into whose hands I would like to have it fall at last?

MARY. (who droops her head during the above) To affect—to affect not to understand you, Sir, would be an idle return for kindness such as yours, and yet----

EDW. I sometimes walk down in the vicinity of your cottage and——

MARY. Should I see you go by without stopping, why, then——

EDW. Then what, dear girl?

MARY. Then I should suppose you had forgotten where we lived.

EDW. Thanks! (kisses her hand) Ah! little did I think, when I thought of selling that dear old cottage, that it should be regarded as a casket, invaluable for the jewel it contained.

Leads her off L.T.E.

SCENE 111.—Interior Of Miss SPINDLE’S dwelling-house—Toilet table, looking-glass, scent bottles—All denotes vulgar wealth devoid of elegance or taste.

MISS SPINDLE discovered at toilette table R.

MISS S. The attractions of the fair sex are synonymous. True, old Bonus is the destroyer of female charms; but as my beautiful poet, Natty P. says, in his sublime epistle to Lucintla Octavia Pauline "Age cannot wither me, nor custom stale my infinite vacuity". But time is money—then money is time; and we bring back, by the aid of money, the times of youth. I value my beauty at fifty dollars a year, as that is about the sum it costs me for keeping it in repair year by year. Well, say that my beauty is repaired in this way, year by year; well, what then? I have heard a gentleman say that a pair of boots, when repaired and foxed, were better than they were when new. Why should it not be so with our charms? Certainly, they last longer in this way. We can have red cheeks at seventy, and, thanks to the dentist, good teeth at any time of life. Woman was made for love. They suppose that my heart is unsusceptible of the tender passion. But the heart can be regulated by money, too. I buy all the affecting novels, and all the terrible romances, and read them till my heart has become soft as maiden wax, to receive the impression of that cherished image I adore. Ah! as true as I live, there goes his foster-brother, William, by the window. Hem!—William! (taps at window, c.)

WILLIAM. Sings without, L.
"When I was a young-and roving-boy,
"Where fancy led me I did wander;
Sweet Caroline was all my joy,
But I missed the goose and hit the gander."

WIL. Good day, Miss Spindle.
MISS S. You heard my rap, William?
WIL. As much as ever, Miss Spindle, Such fingers as yours don't make a noise like the fist of a butcher.
MISS S. My hand is small, William, but I did not suppose that you had noticed it.
WIL. I only noticed it by the lightness of your tap. So I supposed you must be very light-fingered.
MISS S. Pray sit down, William, take a chair—don't be bashful-- you're too modest.
WIL. it's a failing I've got, Miss Spindle. I'm so modest, that I always go to bed without a candle, (both sit c.)
MISS S. (R.C.) Shall I tell you what I have thought, William?
WIL. (i.e.) Why, that's just as you agree to with yourself. I don't care much about it, one way or t'other.
MISS S. You were singing as you came in, William. I suppose you know I sometimes invoke the help of Polyhymnia?
WIL. Why, I don't know as to the help of Polyhym-him-nina; but if you want a good help, you cannot do better than hire Polly Striker, old Farmer Jones's wife's daughter, by her first husband.
MISS S. You don't understand the Heathen mythology, William.
WIL. Why, I hear Parson Roundtext talk sometimes of the poor benighted heathens; but I am free to say that I can't come anything in regard to their conchology, as you call it. Will you have come shell-barks, or chesnuts, Miss Spindle?
MISS S. No, William. But this is what I have thought. William, there are two sorts of men.
WIL. Oh yes, Miss Spindle—long ones and short ones, like cigars. Sometimes the short ones are the best smoking, too.
SCENE 3.

MISS S. You mistake my meaning, William. Some are warm and susceptible of the charms of women——

WIL. Warm?—oh yes! Florida boys, and Carolina Diggers, eh?

MISS S. While others are cold, and apparently insensible to our beauties.

WIL. Oh yes! Newfoundlanders, Canada fellows, and Blue-noses.

MISS S. Now, William, dear William, this is the confession I would confide in your generous secrecy. I have a trembling affection, and them a warm, yet modest flame.

WIL. (aside) Trembling affection—warm flame? Why, the old girl's got the fever and ague!

MISS S. And how to combat with this dear, yet relentless foe.

WIL. Put your feet into warm water and wood ashes—take two quarts of boiling-hot 'arb tea—cover yourself with four thick blankets and six Canada comforters—take a good perspicacity—and you'll be well in the morning.

MISS S. Sir!

WIL. That's old Ma'am Brown's cure for fever and ague, and I never yet found it fail.

MISS S. Fever and ague? You mistake me, William. I have an ardent passion.

WIL. Don't be in a passion, Miss Spindle—it's bad for your complaint.

MISS S. You will not understand. I have a passion for one——

WIL. For one? Well it's very lucky it's only for one.

MISS S. Can you not fancy who that one is? He lives in your house.

WIL. Well, I'm darned, Miss Spindle!—it's either me or Mr. Middleton.

MISS S. I never can bestow my hand without my heart, William.

WIL. Why, I think myself they ought to be included in the same bill of sale.

MISS S. Ah! William—have you ever read "The Children of the Abbey"?

WIL. No, Miss Spindle, but I've read "The Babes in the Wood."

MISS S. I have read all the Romantics of the day. I have just finished Mr. Cooper's "Trapper."

WIL. (aside) Oh! I dare say she understands trap, but she don't come the trapper over my foster-brother this year.

MISS S. (aside) He understands little of the refinements of the civilized circular. I must try something else, (aloud) How do you like my new green dress?—how does it become me?

WIL. Beautiful! It matches very well indeed, Marm.

MISS S. Matches with what, William?

WIL. With your eyes, Marm.

MISS S. It becomes my complexion, William.

WIL. It'll be a beautiful match—like a span of grey horses.

MISS S. Does your master fancy green, William?

WIL. Oh yes, Marm—he loves it fine, I tell you.

MISS S. But in what respect? How did you find it out?
WIL. In respect of drinking, Marm.
MISS S. Drinking?
WIL. Yes. He always tells the cook to make green tea.
MISS S. Well, William, how about the cottage? When are you going to turn out those Wilsons?
WIL. The girl will be out of that place soon, depend on that.

MISS S. I'm glad to hear it. I never could endure those Wilsons; and it's a duty, when one knows that respectable people like your master are injured, to speak out. I know they haven't paid their rent; and do you know that girl was seen getting into a chaise with a young man, when she ought to have been at work; and she did not return till nine o'clock at night, William, for I took the pains to put on my hood and cloak, and look for myself, though it was raining awful.

WIL. That was the time you cotched the fever, the fever and ague, Marm. Well, good bye.
MISS S. Are you going, William?
WIL. Yes, Marm; I shall be wanted to hum. You take care of your precious health, Marm. Keep your feet warm and your head cool—your mouth shut and your heart open—and you'll soon have good health, good conscience, and stand well on your pins, Marm. Good morning, Marm. (sings)

"To reap, to sow, to plough and mow,
And be a farmer's boy—and be a farmer's boy!"

Exit L.

MISS S. The vulgar creature! But what could I expect? He ought to know that American ladies ought never to have any pins. But I am certain, for all this, Edward, dear Edward, is dying for me—as the poet, Dr. Lardner, says—" He lets concealment, like a worm in the bud, feed on the damask curtains of—his—cheek." Damask bud— I'm quite sure it's somewhat about bud. Yes, I am convinced, my charms as yet are undecayed; and even when old age comes on, the charm of refined education will still remain—as the immortal Chelsea Beach Poet has it—

" You may break, you may rain the vase, if you will,
" The scent of the roses will cling round it still."

Exit, affectedly, R.

SCENE IV.—Landscape View

Enter Patience, Brayton, Sam Evans, Old Johnson, Male and female Villagers, R.U.E.-Music

PAT. Come, there's young men enough-let's have a ring-play-
OMNES. Yes, a ring-play—a ring-play! Fall in here!
SAM. Come, darnation! who'll go inside?
PAT. Go in yourself, Sam,
SCENE 4. THE DRUNKARD,

SAM. Well, I'm agreed. Go on.

_They form a circle, and revolve round SAM, singing._

"I am rich widow, I live all alone;
I have but one son, and he is my own.
Go, son--go, son--go choose your one--
Go choose a good one, or else choose none."

SAM chooses one of the girls—She enters the ring—He kisses her, and the ring goes round.

"Now you are married, you must obey
What you have heard your parents say.
Now you are married, you must prove true--
As you see others do, so do you."

_The ring goes round—PATIENCE, who is in the ring, chooses OLD JOHNSON._

PAT. "Mercy on me! what have I done?
I've married the father instead of the son.
His legs are crooked, and ill put on—
They're all laughing at my young man.

_A general laugh._

SAM. Come, girls, you forget 'tis almost time for Mary Wilson's wedding.

PAT. (R.C.) Well, now, ain't we forgetting how proud she must be, going to marry a college-bred.

JOHNSON. (L.C.) She'll be none the better for that. Larning don't buy the child a new frock.

SAM. Well, let's have a dance, and be off at once.

OMNES. Yes. Partners. A dance—a dance!
_A village dance, and exeunt L._

Enter Cribbs, L.

CRIB. Thus end my prudent endeavours to get rid of those Wilsons. But young Middleton—there is yet some hope of him. He is at present annoyed at my well-intended advice; but that shall not part us easily. I will do him some unexpected favour—worm myself into his good graces—invite him to the village bar-room—and if he falls, then—ha, ha! I shall see them begging their bread yet. The wife on her bended knees to me, praying for a morsel of food for her starving children! It will be revenge—revenge!—Here comes his foster-brother, William. I'll wheedle him—try the ground before I put my foot on it.

Enter WILLIAM DOWTON, whistling. L.H.

WIL. Lawyer Cribbs, have you seen my poor little half-witted sister, Agnes, eh?

CRIB. No, William, my honest fellow, I have not? I want to speak to you a moment.
W I L.  (crossing R.)  (aside)  What does old Razor Chops want with me, I wonder? (aloud)  Well, lawyer, what is it?

C R I B.  You seem to be in a hurry.  They keep you moving, I see.

W I L.  These are pretty busy times, Sir.  Mr. Edward is going to be married.  (aside)  That's a dose!  Senna and salts!

C R I B.  Yes, yes—ahem!  Glad to hear it.

W I L.  Yes, I thought you seemed pleased, (aside)  Looks as sour as Sam Jones, when he swallowed vinegar for sweet elder.

C R I B.  I am a friend to early marriages, although I never was married myself.  Give my best respects to Mr. Edward.

W I L.  Sir?

C R I B.  William, suppose I leave it to your ingenuity to get me an invitation to the wedding, eh?  And here's a half dollar to drink my health.

W I L.  No, I thank you, lawyer—I don't want your money.

C R I B.  Oh, very well; no offence meant, you know.  Let's step into the tavern, and take a horn to the happiness of the young couple.

W I L.  Lawyer Cribbs—or Squire, as they call you—it's my opinion, when your uncle Belzebub wants to bribe an honest fellow to do a bad action, he'd better hire a pettifogging, bad lawyer to tempt him, with a counterfeit dollar in one hand, and a bottle of rum in the other.

Exit R.

C R I B.  Ah, ah!  You're a cunning scoundrel, but I'll fix you yet!

A G N E S.  (sings without, L.)

"Brake and fern and cypress dell,
Where the slippery adder crawls."

C R I B.  Here comes that crazy sister of his.  She knows too much for my happiness.  Will the creature never die!  Her voice haunts me like the spectre of the youth that was engaged to her.  For my own purposes, I ruined, I triumphed over him,—he fell,—died in a drunken fit, and she went crazy.  Why don't the Almshouse keep such brats at home?

Enter AGNES, deranged, L.

A G N E S.  (sings)  "Brake and fern and cypress dell,
Where the slippery adder crawls,
Where the grassy waters well,
By the old moss-covered walls."

—For the old man has his grey locks, and the young girl her fantasies.

(sings)  "Upon the heather, when the weather
Is as mild as May,
So they prance, as they dance,
And we'll all be gay."

—But they poured too much red water in his glass.  The lawyer is a fine man—ha, ha!—he lives in the brick house yonder.  But the Will!  Ha, ha, ha!  the will!  ——

C R I B.  (angrily)  Go home, Agnes, go home!
AGNES. Home? I saw a little wren yesterday. I had passed her nest often. I had counted the eggs—they were so pretty—beautiful, so beautiful! Rough Robin of the mill came this morning and stole them. The little bird went to her nest, and looked in—they were gone. She chirruped mournfully, and flew away. She won't go home any more!

CRIB, Agnes, who let you out? You distress the neighbourhood with your muttering and singing. (threatening) I'll have you taken care of!

AGNES. There's to be a wedding in the Village. I saw a coffin carried in, full of bridal-cake.

(sings) "And the bride was red with weeping, Cypress in her hair."

—Can you tell why they cry at weddings? Is it for joy? I used to weep when I was joyful. You never weep, old man. —I should have been married, but my wedding-dress was mildewed, so we put off the marriage till another day. They'll make a new dress for me. They say he won't come again to me. And then, the will—ha, ha! Old man—the will!

CRIB. Ha, confusion! Get you gone, or thus—

Seizes her, and raises cane—WILLIAM enters rapidly R., and throws him round to R. corner.

WIL. (R.C.) Why, you tarnation old black varmint! strike my little, helpless, half-crazed sister? If it was not for your grey hairs, I'd break every bone in your black-beetle body! If all I have heard be true, you'll have to account for——

CRIB, (rising, up.) You'll rue this, young man, if there's any law in the land. A plain case of assault and battery. I'll put you in jail. Predicaments, premunires, fifa's and fleri facias! I'll put you between stone walls!

Exit, blustering, a.

WIL. Put me between stone walls! If you'd have been put between two posts with a cross beam and a hempen rope, long ago, you'd had your due, old land-shark!—You stay here, darling Agnes, till I come back. —Fiery faces and predicaments! If I get you near enough to a horse-pond, I'll cool your fiery face, I'll war-rant.

Exit R.

AGNES, (scattering flowers, and singing)

"They lived down in the valley,
Their house was painted red,
And every day the robin came
To pick the crumbs of bread."

—But the grass does not wither when they die. I will sit down till I hear the bells that are far off, for then I think of his words. Who 14 THE DRUNKARD. [ACT I.
says he did not love me? It was a good character he wanted of the parson. A girl out of place is like an old man out of his grave.

BELLS chime piano.

--They won't ask me to their merry-makings now.

(sings) "Walk up, young man—there's a lady here,
With jewels in her hair."

(suddenly clasps her hands and screams) Water—water! Hear him—oh, hear him cry for water! Quick! he'll turn cold again!—his lips are blue. Water—water!

Exit, frantically, R.H.

SCENE V.—A Village—Exterior of a beautiful Cottage, L.—Vines entwined roses, &c.--The extreme of rural tranquility

'beauty—Rustic table, with fruit, cake, &c. &c, L.—Rustic chairs and benches.

Enter Procession of VILLAGERS, R.U.E. EDWARD, MARY and MRS. WILSON--CLERGYMAN--CHILDREN with baskets of flowers--Bridesman and bridesmaid, &c. &c.--BELLS ringing.—They enter, come down R. to front, cross and up stage on L., singing Chorus.

Hail, hail! happy pair!
Bells are ringing, sweet birds singing;
All around now speaks of bliss;
Bright roses bringing, flowers flinging—
Peace, Purity, and happiness!

EDW. (L.C.) Dearest Mary—ah! now indeed my own; words are too poor, too weak, to express the joy, the happiness that agitates my heart! Ah! dear, dear wife!—may each propitious day that dawns upon thy future life, but add another flower to the rosy garland that now encircles thee!

MARY, (L.) Thanks, Edward, my own loved husband—thy benison is echoed from my inmost heart. Ah! neighbour Johnson, many thanks for your kind remembrance of your pupils. My dear friends, your children, too, are here.

JOHNSON. (R.) Yes, my dear Mary, your happiness sheds its genial rays around old and young. Young man, I was a witness at your father's wedding. May your life be like his—an existence marked by probity and honour, and your death as tranquil! Mrs. Wilson, I remember your sweet daughter, when but a child of nine years, and that seems only yesterday.

MARY. Dear Patience, I am glad to see you too; and who is this—your brother? (points to SAM, L. corner)

PATIENCE. No, an acquaintance that —

SAM. Yes,—an acquaintance that —

MARY. Oh yes, I understand.
ACT II. THE DRUNKARD.

MRS. W. My dearest children, the blessing of a bereaved heart rest, like the dews of heaven, upon you! Come, neighbours, this is a festival of joy. Be happy, I entreat.

WIL. Well, if there's any one here happier than Bill Dowton, I should like to know it, that's all. Come, lads and lasses—sing, dance, and be merry!

Dance.-TABLEAU.

END OF ACT THE FIRST.

A lapse of Six Years.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Chamber MISS SPINDLE'S house.

LAWYER CRIBBS and MISS SPINDLE discovered, seated, c.

CRIB. (L.) Be explicit, my dear Madam; this is a most serious affair—breach of promise, marriage promise. How my heart bleeds for you—dear young lady—suffering virtue! But tell me the particulars.

MISS S. (r) Oh, sir! why will you cause me to harrow up my feelings, my bleeding heart, by the recital of my afflictions? I have "let concealment, like a" caterpillar on a button-wood, feed on my cambric cheek—and——(aside) I can't remember the rest of it.

CRIB. Alas, poor lady! Pray go on.

MISS S. The first of our acquaintance was at a corn husking. Not that I make a practice of attending such vulgar places, Squire, but—

CRIB. Oh, certainly not—certainly not.

MISS S. Well, I was over-persuaded. I set up and stripped the dry coatings from the yellow corn—only two ears—I husked no more squire.

CRIB. Indeed, indeed! two ears—you are certain it was but two ears? It is best to be particular. We shall make out a prima facia

MISS S. Well, I got hold of a red ear—it was the last I husked, I think it was a red ear;—so I was obliged to be kissed. Oh, Squire, think of my mortification, when I was told that such was the invariable rule—the custom at a husking!

CRIB. (with energy) Your sufferings must have been intolerable.

MISS S. Oh, Sir, you know how to feel for delicate timidity. A big, coarse young man, called Bill Bullus, rose up to snatch the fragrance from my unwilling cheek
Miss S. I put up my kerchief—it was a cambric, a fine cambric, Squire Cribbs—and said I had a choice in those things—looking at Edward, whom I knew to be a gentleman, you know. He took the hint immediately. Bullad fell back appalled at my manner, and Edward—oh, Sir, spare my blushes!

CRIB. I understand—he—yes. I understand
MISS S. He did it, Sir. I felt the pressure of his warm lips on—— CRIB. Your cheek of course
MISS S. Oh, no, no, Sir. It was said, by my friend, the Chelsea Beach Bard, that from my lips he stole ambrosical blisses.
CRIB. Enormous! but go on.
MISS S. You may judge what was my confusion.
CRIB. Certainly, Miss Spindle.
MISS S. The ear of corn was not more red than was my burnished cheek.
CRIB. I do not know, my dear young lady, but you might make out a case of assault and battery.
MISS S. It was very rude for a college-bred. Well, after that he bowed to me as we were coming out of church.
CRIB. Aha! the evidence comes in, Have you got proof of that, most injured fair one?
MISS S. Oh, Sir, no proof would be required. I trust that person of my respectability need bring no proof of what they know. Well, after that I was going down to Mr. Simmons', and lo, a cow stood in the road. I must pass within twenty feet of the ferocious animal if I continued my route; providentially, at the very instant, Edward came down the road that turns up by Wollcott's mill. He saw my strait. He saw that I stood trembling like some fragile flower tossed by the winds of heaven. Like Sir William Wallace flying to the rescue of the Greeks, he came, panting on the wings of love. He rushed like an armed castle to the side of the cow, and she wheeled about like the great leviathan of the deep, and trotted down towards the school-house.
CRIB. I can imagine your feelings, Miss Spindle—a delicate young lady in imminent danger But he did no more than any other man would have done.
MISS S. Well, sir, you may judge what were the feelings of my palpitating heart, tender as it always was CRIB. Have any letters passed between you?
MISS S. Oh, yes, yes! five or six, Sir.
CRIB. We've got him there aha! If Miss Spindle would be so condescending as just to show me one of those letters.
MISS S. He's got them all in his possession.
CRIB. Unfortunate! horrible! How did he obtain possession of those letters?
MISS S. Oh! I sent them—sometimes by one person, sometimes by another.
CRIB. How, Madam? His letters, I mean—how did he get MISS S. Oh, Sir, mark his ingratitude. I sent him half-a-dozen
SCENE 2.]

THE DRUNKARD.

CRIB, (discouraged) Oh! I understand. The correspondence was all on one side, then?

Miss S. Not one letter did he write to me. Ah! Sir, think of it; all my tenderness, all my devotion. Oh! my breaking heart.

CRIB, (aside) Oh! humbug! Well, good day, Miss Spindle. I have a pressing engagement, and-- MISS S. Well, but, lawyer Cribbs, what is your advice? How ought I to proceed?

CRIB. Get your friends to send you to the insane hospital, and place you among the incurable as the most fusty, idiotic old maid that ever knit stockings.

Exit hastily, R.

MISS S. Spirit of Lucretia Borgia! Polish pattern of purity—was there ever such a Yankee hedgehog!

Exit angrily, R.

SCENE II.—Landscape View.

Enter CRIBBS, L.

CRIB. So far the scheme works admirably. Day by day, he sinks deeper into the gulf of disgrace and ruin. I left him in a fix the other evening, after having led him into company that suited my purpose; and when I saw he was fairly in for a violent and disreputable broil, I left him. Ha, ha! I know his nature well. He has tasted, and will not stop now short of madness or oblivion. I mostly fear his wife—she will have great influence over him. Here comes Edward. Caution—caution! (retires L.)

Enter EDWARD, L.

EDW. Is this to be the issue of my life? Oh! must I ever yield to the fell tempter, and, bending like a weak bulrush to the blast, still bow my manhood lower than the brute? Why, surely I have eyes to see, hands to work with, feet to walk, and brain to think; yet the best gifts of Heaven I abuse, lay aside her bounties, and with my own hand willingly put out the light of reason. I recollect my mother said—my dear, dying mother—they were the last words I ever heard her utter—"Whoever lifts his fallen brother, is greater far than the conqueror of the world." Oh, how my poor brain burns!—my hand troubles!—my knees shake beneath me! I cannot, will not appear before them thus. A little—a very little—will revive and for my hiding-place. Oh! the arch cunning of the drunkard!

Goes to tree R., and from the hollow draws forth a bottle; looks round and drinks—CRIBBS behind, exulting.

—So, so!—It relieves—it strengthens! Oh, glorious liquor! why did I rail against thee? Ha, ha! (drinks and drains bottle) All gone! all! (throws bottle away) Of what use the casket when the jewel's gone? Ha, ha! I can face them now. (turns, and meets CRIBBS) He here? Confusion!
CRIB. (L.) Why, Middleton! Edward, my dear friend, what means this?
EDW. (R.) Tempter! begone! Pretend not ignorance! Were you not there when that vile fray occurred? Did you not desert me?
CRIB. As I am a living man, I know what you mean. Business called me out. I left you jovial and merry, with your friends.
EDW. Friends! Ha! ha! the drunkard's friends! Well, well, you may speak truth;—my brain wanders;—I'll go home! Oh, misery! Would I were dead.
CRIB. Come come; a young man like you should not think of dying. I am old enough to be your father, and I don't dream of such a thing.

EDW. You are a single man, Cribbs. You don't know what it is to see your little patrimony wasted away;—to feel that you are the cause of sufferings you would die to alleviate.
CRIB. Pooh, pooh! Sufferings—your cottage is worth full five hundred dollars. It was but yesterday Farmer Anson was inquiring how much it could be bought for.
EDW. Bought for! Cribbs-----
CRIB. Well, Edward, well.
EDW. You see yon smoke curling up among the trees?
CRIB. Yes, Edward. It rises from your own cottage.
EDW. You know who built that cottage, Cribbs?
CRIB. Your father built it. I recollect the day. It was the very day I was born that yon cottage was first inhabited. You know who lives there now?
CRIB. Yes! You do.
EDW. No one else, Cribbs?
CRIB. Your family, to be sure--
EDW. And you counsel me to sell it!—to take the warm nest from that mourning bird and her young, to strip them of all that remains of hope or comfort, to make them wanderers in the wide world, and for what? To put a little pelf into my leprous bands, and then squander it for rum, (crosses it.)
CRIB. You don't understand me, Edward. I am your sincere friend—believe me—come
EDW. Leave me, leave me------
CRIB. Why, where would you go thus, Edward!
EDW. Home! Home!—to my sorrowing wife—her dying mother, and my poor, poor child, (crosses L.)
CRIB. But not thus, Edward, not thus. Come to my house, my people are all out. We'll go in the back way—no one will see you. Wash your face, and I'll give you a little—something to refresh you.
EDW. Ought I—dare I? Oh! this deadly sickness. Is it indeed best?
CRIB. To be sure it is. If the neighbours see you thus—I'll take care of you. Come, come, a little brandy—good—good brandy.
EDW. Well, I—I
CRIB. That's right—come, (aside) He's lost. Come, my dear friend, come. ________

Exeunt L.
SCENE III.—Interior of Cottage, as in Act First—The furniture very plain—A want of comfort and order—Table and two chairs, R.C.

Enter MARY, from set door, R. 2 E.—Her dress plain and patched, but put on with neatness and care—She is weeping.

MARY. Oh, heaven, have mercy on me!—aid me!—strengthen me! Weigh not thy poor creature down with woes beyond her strength to bear! Much I fear my suffering mother never can survive the night; and Edward comes not,—and when he does arrive, how will it be? Alas, alas! my dear, lost husband! I think I could nerve myself against, everything but——Oh, misery! this agony of suspense!—it is too horrible!

Enter JULIA, from room, R. 2 E.—She is barefooted—Dress clean, but very poor.

JULIA. Mother, dear mother! what makes you cry? I feel so sorry when you cry! Don't cry any more, dear mother!
MARY. (L.) I cannot help it, dearest! Do not tell your poor father what has happened in his absence, Julia.
JULIA. No, dear mother, if you wish me not. Will it make him cry, mother? When I see you cry, it makes me cry too.
MARY. Hush, dear one, hush! Alas! he is unhappy enough already.
JULIA. Yes; poor father! I cried last night when father came home and was so ill. Oh! he looked so pale; and when I kissed him for good night, his face was as hot as fire. This morning he could not eat his breakfast, could he? What makes him ill so often, mother?
MARY. Hush, sweet one!
JULIA. Dear grandma so sick, too. Doctor and nurse both looked so sorry. Grandma won't-die to-night, will she, mother?
MARY. Father of mercies! This is too much! (weeps) Be very quiet, Julia—I am going in to see poor grandma, (crossing R.) Oh, Religion! sweet solace of the wretched heart! support me—aid me, in this dreadful trial!

Exit into room, R.2.E
JULIA. Poor, dear mother! When grandma dies, she'll go to live in heaven, for she's good. Parson Heartall told me so, and he never tells fibs, for he is good too.

Enter WILLIAM, gently, D. in F.
WIL. Julia, where is your mother, darling?
JULIA. (puts her finger on her lip, and points to door)
WIL. Ah! she comes!

Enter MARY, R. 2 E.

—How is poor Mrs. Wilson now Marm?
MARY. Near the end of all earthly trouble, William. She lies in broken slumber. But where is my poor Edward? Have you not found him?
WIL. Yes, Marm, I found him in the ta—in the village—he had fallen, and slightly hurt his forehead; he bade me come before, so as you should not be frightened. He'll soon be here now.

MARY. Faithful friend! I wish you had not left him. Was he—oh, what a question for a doating wife!—was he sober, William?

WIL. I must not lie, dear lady. He had been taking some liquor, but I think not much,—all, I hope, will be well, EDW. (sings without) "Wine cures the gout," &c. Ha, ha!

MARY. Oh, great heaven!

WILLIAM rushes out C.D., and off L.U.E., and re-enters with EDWARD drunk and noisy—WILLIAM trying to soothe him—He staggers as he passes doorway.

EDW. I've had a glorious time, Bill. Old Cribs——

MARY. (R.) Hush, dearest!

EDW. Why should I be silent? I am not a child. I——

MARY. My mother, Edward, my dear mother!

EDW. (sinks in chair) Heaven's wrath on my hard heart! I—I forgot. How is she? Poor woman! how is she?

MARY. Worse, Edward, worse, (trying to hide her tears)

EDW. And I in part the cause. Oh, horrid vice! Bill, I remember my father's death-bed—it was a Christian's: faith in his heart, hope in his calm blue eye—a smile upon his lips. He had never seen his Edward drunk. Oh, had he seen it—had he seen it!

JULIA. (crossing to her father from R. to C.) Father, dear father? (striving to kiss him)

EDW. Leave me, child, leave me. I am hot enough already, (she weeps, he kisses her) Bless you, Julia, dear, bless you. Bill, do you rember the young elm tree by the arbour in the garden?

WIL. Yes, Sir,

EDW. Well, I slipped and fell against it, as I passed the gate. My father planted it on the very day I saw the light. It has grown with my growth; I seized the axe and felled it to the earth. Why should it flourish when I am lost for ever! (hysterically) Why should it lift its head to smiling heaven while I am prostrate! Ha, ha, ha!

A groan is heard R.D.—Exit MARY—A pause—A shriek.

Enter MARY.

MARY. Edward, my mother—

EDW. Mary!——

MARY. She is dead!

EDW. Horror! Death in the house. I cannot bear this; let me fly——

MARY. (springing forward, and clapping his neck) Edward, dear Edward, do not leave me. I will work, I will slave, anything: we can live; but do not abandon me in misery; do not desert me, Edward! love! husband!

EDW. Call me not husband—curse me as your destroyer—loose your arms—leave me.

MARY. No, no! do not let him go. William, hold him.
ACT III.

Act of The Drunkard. 21

WIL. (holding him) Edward, dear brother!
JULIA. (clinging to him) Father! father!
MARY. You will be abused. No one near to aid you. Imprisoned, or something worse, Edward.
EDW. Loose me—leave me—why fasten me down on fire? Madness is my strength; my brain is liquid flame! (breaks from her--WILLIAM is obliged to catch her) Ha! I am free. Farewell, for ever! (rushes off C.D.)
MARY. Husband! Oh, Heaven! (faints)
WIL. (bursting into tears) Edward! brother!
JULIA. Father, father! (runs to the door, and falls on the threshold) END of ACT THE SECOND

An internal of Two Years.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—New York—Broadway.

Enter LAWYER CRIBBS, R.

CRIB. I wonder where that drunken vagrant can have wandered? Ever since he came to New York, thanks to his ravenous appetite and my industrious agency, he has been going down hill rapidly. Could I but tempt him to some overt act, well managed, I could line my own pockets and ensure his ruin. Ha! here he comes, and two of his bright companions. He looks most wretchedly. Money gone, and no honest way to raise it. He'll be glad to speak to old Cribbs now. I must catch my time. (retiring)

Enter EDWARD and two LOAFERS.

1ST. LOAFER. Cheer up, Ned; there's more money where the last came from.
EDW. (clothes torn and very shabby, but the same) But I tell you my last cent is gone. I feel ill. I want more liquor.
1st. LOAFER. Well, well, you wait round here a spell. Joe and I will take a turn down to cross street. (crosses L.) We'll make a raise, I warrant you.
EDW. Well, be quick then; this burning thirst consumes me.

Exit LOAFERS, L.

CRIB. (advancing L.) Why! is that you, Mr. Middleton?
EDW. (R.) Yes, Cribbs; what there is left of me.
CRIB. Why, I don't see that you are much altered, though you might be the better for a stitch or two in your elbows.

EDW. Ah, Criggs, I have no one to care for me. I am lost—a ruined, broken-hearted man!

CRIB. You won't be offended, Middleton, will you? Allow me to lead you a dollar. I am not very rich, you know, but you can always have a dollar or two when you want it; ask me—there, there. (offering money) (aside) Before sundown, he's a few yards nearer his grave!

EDW. (slowly taking it, struggling with pride and necessity) Thank you, Mr. Criggs thank you! You are from the village;—I hardly dare ask you if you have seen them.

CRIB. Your wife and child? Oh! they are doing charmingly, Since you left, your wife has found plenty of sewing, the gentlefolks have become interested in her pretty face, and you know she has a good education. She is as merry as a cricket and your little girl blooming as a rose, and brisk as a bee.

EDW. Then Mary is happy?

CRIB. Happy as a lark.

EDW. (after a pause) Well, I ought to be glad of it, and since she thinks no more of me——

CRIB. Oh yes, she thinks of you occasionally.

EDW. Does she indeed?

CRIB. Yes, who says she cannot but pity you. But that Heaven never sends affliction without the antidote, and that, but for your brutal—hem!—your strange conduct and drunkenness—hem!—misfortune, she would never have attracted the sympathy of those kind friends, who now regard her as the pride of their circle.

EDW. Did she really say all that?

CRIB. Yes, and she pities you. I am sure she thinks of you, and would be glad to see you—to see you become a respectable member of society.

EDW. (musing) It is very kind of her—very—very kind pities me! respectable! But, Criggs, how can one become respectable, Without a cent in his pocket, or a whole garment on his wretched carcass?

CRIB. (pause) There are more ways than one to remedy these casualties. If the world uses you ill, be revenged upon the world!

EDW. Revenged! But how, Criggs, how?

CRIB, (cautiously) Do you see this paper? Tis a check for five thousand dollars. You are a splendid penman. Write but the name of Arden Rencelaw, and you may laugh at poverty.

EDW. What! forgery? and on whom? The princely merchant! the noble philanthropist! the poor man's friend! the orphan's benefactor! Out and out on you for a villain, and coward! I must be sunk indeed, when you dare propose such a baseness to my father's son. Wretch as I am, by the world despised, shunned and neglected by those who should save and succour me, I would sooner perish on the first dunghill—than that my dear child should blush for her father's crimes. Take back your base bribe, miscalled charity; the maddening drink that I should purchase with it, would be redolent of sin, and rendered still more poisonous by your foul hypocrisy, (throws down the money)

CRIB. (bursting with passion) Ah, you are warm, I see. You'll think better when—when you find yourself starving.

Exit L.

Edw. Has it then come to this? an object of pity to my once adored wife: no longer regarded with love—respect—but cold compassion, pity; other friends have fully made up my loss. She is flourishing, too, while I am literally starving—starving—this cold-blooded fiend, too—what's to become of me? Deserted, miserable—but one resource. I must have liquor—ha!—my handkerchief—twill gain me a drink or to at all events. brandy aye, brandy! brandy! (rushes off, R.)

SCENE II.—A Street—Stage half dark.

Enter CRIBBS, R.

CRIB. Plague take the fellow; who would have thought he would have been so foolishly conscientious? I will not abandon my scheme on the house of Rencelaw though; the speculation is too good to be lost. Why! as I live, here comes that old fool, Miss Spindle.

Enter MISS SPINDLE, L., in full Bloomer Costume.

MISS S. Why! this New York is the most awful place to find one's way I ever was in; it's all ups and downs, ins and outs. I've been trying for two hours to find Trinity Church steeple—and I can't see it, though they tell me it's six hundred yards high.

CRIB. Why, angelic Miss Spindle, how do you do? How long have you been in the commercial emporium?

MISS S. Oh, Squire Cribbs, how d'ye do? I don't know what you mean by the uproarlum, but for certain it is the noisiest place I ever did see. But, Squire, what has become of the Middletons, can you tell?

CRIB. I've had my eye upon them; they're down, Miss Spindle, never to rise again; as for that vagrant, Edward——

MISS S. Ah, Squire! what an escape I had! How fortunate that I was not ruined by the nefarious influence, the malign ant coruscations of his illimitable seductions! How lucky that prim Miss Mary Wilson was subjected to his hideous arts, instead of my virgin immaculate innocence!

CRIB. Do you know why his wife left the village and came to New York?

MISS S. Oh, she is low, degraded! She sank so far as to take in washing, to feed herself and child. She would sooner follow her drunken husband, and endeavour to preserve him, as she said, than remain where she was.

CRIB. Well, well, they are down low enough now. Which way are you going, towards Broadway? Why, I'm going towards Broadway myself. Allow me the exquisite honour of bea uniting you. This way, perfection of your sex, and adoration of ours—your arm, lovely and immaculate Miss Spindle.

Exit together, arm-in-arm, L.

Enter EDWARD and 1st and 2nd LOAFER, R.

1st. LOAFER. To be sure I did. I swore if he didn't let me have two or three dollars, I'd tell his old man of last night's scrape, and I soon got it to get rid of me.

2nd. LOAFER. Hurrah for snakes! Who's afraid of fire? Come,
Ned, two or three glasses of brandy will soon drive away the blue devils. Let's have some brandy.

EDW. With all my heart. Brandy be it. Since I am thus abandoned—deserted—the sooner I drown all remembrance of my wretchedness the better, come! Boys, brandy be it. Hurrah!

OMNES. (sing) "Here's a health to all good lasses!"

Exeunt, R.

SCENE III.--Interior of The Arbour on Broadway,—Bar with decanters, &c. R.—"Table with Back-gammon Board at back. c.
—Two men playing at it.—Another reading paper and smoking.
—Others seated around, &c.

Enter EDWARD and LOAFERS, R., singing—"Here's a health," &c

BAR-KEEPER. (behind bar) The same noisy fellows that were here last night. What is it to be, gentlemen?

EDW. Oh, brandy for me—brandy.

1st. LOAFER. Give me a gin-sling—that's what killed Goliath, ha, ha, ha!

2nd. LOAFER. I'll have brandy. Come, old fellows tread up, and whet your whistles. I'll stand Sam, tread up.

EDWARD and others, after drinking, dance and sing—
"Dan Tucker," "Boatman Dance," &c.

BAR-KEEPER I must civilly request, gentlemen, that you will not make so much noise; you disturb others—and we wish to keep the house quiet.

EDW. Steady, boys, steady; don't raise a row in a decent house.
More brandy, young man, if you please. Come, Bill, try it again.

1st LOAFER. With all my heart, hurrah!

EDW. and LOAFERS. "Dance, Boatman, dance," &c. (laugh)
More brandy, hurrah!

BAR-KEEPER. I tell you once for all, I'll not have this noise.
Stop that singing.

2nd LOAFER. I shan't; we'll slug as long as we please,—give me some liquor.

EDW. Aye, more brandy—brandy

BAR-KEEPER. Well, will you be still, then, if I give you another drink?

EDW. Oh, certainly, certainly.

1st LOAFER In course we will——

BAR-KEEPER. Well, help yourselves. (hands decanters)
SCENE 4.]  THE  DRUNKARD.  25.

2nd LOAFER. What's yours, Ned?
EDW. Oh, brandy!—here goes. (fills and drinks)
1st LOAFER. Here goes for the last!
OMNES. (singing) "We won't go home till morning," &c.
MAN. (at table, playing checkers) Look here—that's my king.
2nd MAN. (at table) You're a liar! I have just jumped him,
1st MAN. (at table) I tell you, you lie!

Regular wrangle.

and

Go it, you cripples! (singing and laughing)
LOAFERS.

BAR-KEEPER. Stop that noise, I tell you! Come, get out!

Pushing man from table—the two men fight.

and

Go it, Charley! Hurrah! &c.
LOAFERS.

Regular some of confusion—Bar-room fight, &c., during which stage is cleared—till fight off, and change to

SCENE IV.—A wretched garret—Old table and chair: with lamp burning dimly—MARY, in miserable apparel, sewing slop-work; a wretched shawl thrown over her shoulders—JULIA sleeping on a straw bed on the floor R., covered in part by a miserable ragged rug—Half a loaf of bread on the table—The ensemble of the scene indicates want and poverty.

MARY. Alas, alas! It is very cold! Faint with hunger—sick—heart-weary with wretchedness, fatigue, and cold!

CLOCK STRIKES ONE.

—One o'clock, and my work not near finished. ! . . . They must be done to-night. These shirts I have promised to hand in to-morrow by the hour of eight. A miserable quarter of a dollar will repay my industry, and then, my poor, poor child, thou shalt have food.

JULIA. (awaking) Oh, dear mother, I am so cold!

MARY. (takes shawl from her shoulders, and spreads it over the child)

JULIA. No, mother, keep the shawl. You are cold, too. I will wait till morning, and I can warm myself at Mrs. Brien's fire—little Dennis told me I should, for the gingerbread I gave him.

Goes to sleep murmuring—MARY puts the shawl on herself;

waits till the child slumbers, and then places it over

JULIA, and returns to work.

MARY. Alas! where is he on this bitter night! In vain have I made every inquiry, and cannot gain any tidings of my poor, wretched husband. No one knows him by name. Perhaps already the inmate of a prison. Ah, merciful heaven! restore to me my

Edward once again, and I will endure every ill that can be heaped upon me. (looks towards child) Poor Julia! she sleeps soundly.

She was fortunate to-day, sweet lamb! While walking in the street, in search of a few shavings, she became benumbed with cold. She sat down upon some steps, when a boy, moved with companion, took from his neck a handkerchief, and placed it upon hers. The mother of that boy is blessed! With the few cents he slipped into her hands, she purchased a loaf of bread; she ate a part of it—(taking bread from table) and the rest is here, (looks eagerly at it) I am hungry—horribly hungry! I shall have money in the morning, (a pause) No, no; my child will wake, and find her treasure gone. I will not rob darling, (replaces bread on table—Sinks into chair, weeping) That ever I should see his child thus! for myself, I could bear, could suffer all.

JULIA awakes noiselessly, perceiving shawl, rises and places it over her mother's shoulders.

JULIA. Dear mother, you are cold. Ah, you tried to cheat your darling.

MARY, (on her knees) Now heaven be praised. I did not eat that bread.

JULIA. Why, mother, do you sit up so late? You cry so much, and look so white—mother, do not cry. Is it because father does not come to bring us bread? We shall find father by and bye, shan't we, mother?

MARY. Yes, dearest—yes, with the kind aid of Him. (knock at the door, L.) Who can that be! Ah, should it be Edward? (going to L.)

Enter CRIBBS L.D.

CRIB, (L.) Your pardon, Mrs. Middleton, for my intrusion at this untimely hour, but friends are welcome at all times and seasons, eh? So, so, you persist in remaining in these miserable quarters? When last I saw you, I advised a change.

MARY. (R.C.) Alas! Sir, you too well know my wretched reasons for remaining. But why are you here at this strange hour. Oh, tell me, know you aught of him? Have you brought tidings of my poor Edward.

CRIB, (avoiding direct answer) I must say your accommodations are none of the best, and must persist in it, you would do well to shift your quarters.

MARY. Heaven help me! Where would you have me go? Return to the village, I will not. I must remain and find my husband.

CRIB. This is a strange infatuation, young woman; it is the more strange, as he has others to console him, whose soft attentions he prefers, to yours.

MARY. What mean you, Sir?

CRIB. I mean, that there are plenty of women, not of the most respectable class, who are always ready to receive presents from wild young men like him, and are not very particular in the liberties that may be taken in exchange.

MARY. Man! man! why dost thou degrade the form and sense heaven has bestowed on thee by falsehood? Gaze on the sharp features of that child, where famine has already set her seal, look on the hollow eyes, and the careworn form of the hapless being that brought her into life, then if you have the heart, further insult the helpless mother, and the wretched wife.
CRIB. These things I speak of, have been, and will be again, while there ape wantons of one sex, and drunkards of the other.

MARY. Sir, you slander my husband. I know this cannot be. It is because he is poor, forsaken, reviled, and friendless, that thus I follow him, thus love him still.

CRIB. He would laugh in his drunken ribaldry, to hear you talk thus.

MARY, (with proud disdain) Most contemptible of earth-born creatures, it is false. The only fault of my poor husband, has been intemperance, terrible, I acknowledge, but still a weakness that has assailed and prostrated the finest intellects of men who would scorn a mean and unworthy action.

CRIB. Tut, tut, you are very proud, considering—(looking round)—all circumstances. But come, I forgive you. You are young and beautiful, your husband is a vagabond. I am rich, I have a true affection for you, and with me—(attempts to take her hand.)

MARY. Wretch! (throws him off) Have you not now proved yourself a slanderer, and to effect your own vile purposes. But know, despicable wretch, that my poor husband, clothed in rags, covered with mire, and lying drunk at my feet, is a being whose shoes you are not worthy to unloose.

CRIB. Nay, then, proud beauty, you shall know my power—'tis late—you are unfriended, helpless, and thus—-(he seizes her—JULIA screams.)

MARY, Help! mercy!

She struggles with CRIBBS—WILLIAM enters hastily L., seizes CRIBBS and throws him round to L, he falls.

WIL. Well, Squire, what's the lowest you'll take for your rotten carcase? Shall I turn auctioneer, and knock you down to the highest bidder? I don't know much of pernology, but I've a great notion of playing Yankee Doodle on your organ of rascality. Be off, you ugly varmint, or I'll come the steam engine, and set your paddles going all-fired quick.

CRIB. I'll be revenged, if there's law or justice.

WIL. Oh, get out! You're a bad case of villany versus modesty and chastity, printed in black letters, and bound in calf, off with you, or I'll serve a writ of ejectment on you, a posteriori—I learnt that much from Mr. Middleton's law books.

CRIB. But I say, sir--I am a man.

WIL. You a man? Nature made a blunder. She had a piece of refuse garbage, she intended to form into a hog, made a mistake, gave it your shape, and sent it into the world to be miscalled man. Get out! (pushes him off, L.—Noise of falling down stairs)

Re-enters.

—I did not like to hit him before you, but he's gone down these stairs, quicker than he wanted to, I guess.

MARY. Kind, generous friend, how came you here so opportunely?

WIL. Why, I was just going to bed, at a boarding-house close by Chatham-street, when I happened to mention the landlord, a worthy man as ever broke bread, about you. He told me where you were.
THE DRUNKARD. [ACT III.

I thought you might be more comfortable there, and his good wife has made everything as nice and pleasant for you as if you were her own sister. So come, Mrs. Middleton—come, Julia dear.

MARY. But, William, my poor husband?

WIL. There's another row! Well, if this New York isn't the awfullest place for noise! Come, Mrs. Middleton. I'll find him if he's in New York—jail or no jail—watch-house or no watch-house!

MARY. Heaven preserve my poor dear Edward!

Going up stage to put on JULIA'S bonnet—closed in by SCENE V.—The Five Prints—Stage dark—Noise R. and L.

Enter EDWARD MIDDLETON in the custody of Two WATCHMEN; he is shouting—WILLIAM DOWTON enters hastily, knocks down WATCHMEN, rescues EDWARD, and they exit R. Other ROWDIES enter—Fight—Stage clear—Shouts, &c. and off R.

Enter CRIBBS, with coat torn half off, from L.U.E.

CRIB. Oh, my! Oh, good gracious! How can I get out of this scrape? I came here with the best intentions—oh, my I—to see the law put in force! Oh dear! somebody has torn my coat tail! Good gracious! Lord have mercy! I've lost my hat,—no, here it is.

Picks up dreadful shabby hat, and puts it on—runs from one side to another.---Enter WATCHMEN and MOB, meeting him, from R.

WIL. (pointing out CRIBBS to WATCHMEN) That's the chap—the worst among 'em.

They seize CRIBBS.

CRIB. I'm a respectable man!

They pick him up bodily, and carry him off R., shouting—He exclaims, "I'm a lawyer, I'm a respectable man," &c.---WILLIAM follows laughing—General confusion.

END OF ACT THE THIRD

An interval of One Year.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A wretched out-house or shed, supposed to be near a tavern—Early morning—Stage dark.

EDWARD discovered lying on ground, without hat or coat, clothes torn, eyes sunk and haggard, appearance horrible, &c. &c.

EDW. (awakening) Where am I? I wonder if people dream after they are dead? Hideous! hideous! I should like to be dead,
If I could not dream! parched! parched! Tis morning, is it, or coming night, which? I wanted daylight, but now it has come, what shall I do in daylight? I was out of sight when it was dark—and seemed to be half hidden from myself—early morning, the rosy hue of the coming sunshine, veiling from mortal sight the twinkling stars—What horrid dreams!—will they return upon me, waking? Oh for some brandy! rum! I am not so ashamed, so stricken with despair, when I am drunk. Landlord, give me some brandy. What horrid place is this? Pain! dreadful pain! Heavens, how I tremble. Brandy! brandy! (sinks down in agony)

Enter LANDLORD, with whip, R.

LAND. Where in nature can my horse be gone? Is there nobody up in this place? Hollo!

EDW. Hollo! Landlord, I say.

LAND. What's that? Oh! I say, have you seen my horse? What—as I live, that scape-gallows, Middleton, how came he here? (aside) I thought he was in Sing-Sing.

EDW. Oh! I know you, you needn't draw back—we have been acquainted before now, eh! Mr.—

LAND. Zounds! he knows me—yes, yes, we were acquainted once, as you say, young man; but that was in other days.

EDW. You are the same being still—though I am changed—miserably changed—but you still sell rum, don't you?

LAND. I am called a respectable Inn-keeper, few words are best, young fellow. Have you seen a horse saddled and bridled near here?

EDW. I've seen nothing—you are respectable you say. You speak as if you were not the common poisoner of the whole village; am not I too, respectable?

LAND, (laughs rudely) Not according to present appearances. You were respectable once, and so was Lucifer—like him you have fallen past rising. You cut a pretty figure, don't you? ha, ha! what has brought you in this beastly condition, young man?

EDW. (springing up) You! Rum! Eternal curses on you! had it not been for your infernal poison shop in our village, I had been still a man—the foul den, where you plunder the pockets of your fellows, where you deal forth death in tumblers, and from whence goes forth the blast of rain over the land, to mildew the bright hope of youth, to fill the widow's heart with agony, to curse the orphan, to steal the glorious mind of man, to cast them from their high estate of honest pride, and make them—such as I. How looked I when first I entered your loathsome den, and how do I look now? Where are the friends of my happy youth? where is my wife? where is my child? They have cursed me; cursed me, and forsaken me!

LAND. Well, what brought you to my house? You had your senses then, I did not invite you, did I?

EDW. Doth hell send forth cards of invitation to its fires of torment? Oh, I am sick and faint—make me some amends, my brain is on fire. My limbs are trembling—give me some brandy—brandy! (seizes him)
LAND. How can I give you brandy? my house is far from here. Let me go, vagabond.

EDW. Nay, I beseech you—only a glass, a single glass of brandy, rum—anything—give me liquor, or I'll—

LAND. Villain! let go your hold!

EDW. Brandy! I have a claim on you, a deadly claim! Brandy, brandy! or I'll throttle you! (choking him)

LAND. (struggling) Help, murder! I am choking! help!

Enter WILLIAM DOWTON, R.

WIL. Good lord! what is this? Edward, Edward!

EDW. (releases LANDLORD, and falls R.)

LAND. You shall pay for this—villain! you shall pay for this. Exit, hastily, L.

EDW. (on ground in delirium) Here, here, friend, take it off, will you—this snake, how it coils round me. Oh! how strong it is! There, don't kill it,--no, no, don't kill it,—give it brandy, poison it with rum, that will be a judicious punishment, that would be justice. Ha, ha! Justice! ha! ha!

WIL. He does not know me.

EDW. Hush! gently—gently, while she's asleep. I'll kiss her. She would spurn me, did she know it. Hush! there, heaven bless my Mary—bless her and her child. Hush! if the globe turns round once more, we shall slide from its surface into eternity. Ha, ha! Great idea. A boiling sea of wine, fired by the torch of fiends! Ha, ha!

WIL. He's quite helpless, could I but gain assistance, he cannot move to injure himself. I must venture.

Exit rapidly and noiselessly, L.

EDW. So, so; Again all's quiet—they think I cannot escape. I cheated them yesterday—'tis a sin to steal liquor—

Enter MR. RENCÉLAW, R.

—But no crime to purloin sleep from a druggist's store—none—none, (produces phial) Now for the universal antidote—the powerful conqueror of all earthly care—death, (about to drink, RENCÉLAW seizes phial and casts it from him) Ha! who are you, man? what would you?

REN. Nay, friend, take not your life, but mend it.

EDW. Friend! you know me not. I am a fiend, the ruin of those who loved me, leave me.

REN. I came not, to upbraid, nor to insult you. I am aware of all your danger, and come to save you. You have been drinking.

EDW. That you may well know. I am dying now for liquor—" and—will you give me brandy. Who are you that takes interest in an unhappy vagabond—neither my father nor my brother!

REN. I am a friend to the unfortunate. You are a man, and if a man, a brother.

EDW. A brother! yes, but you trouble yourself without hope. I am lost, of what use can I be to you?
SCENE 2.] THE DRUNKARD.

REN. Perhaps I can be of use to you. Are you indeed a fallen man? (EDWARD looks at him, sighs, and hangs his head) Then you have the greater claim upon my compassion, my attention, my utmost endeavours to raise you once more, to the station in society from which you have fallen, "for he that lifts a fallen fellow creature from the dust, is greater than the hero who conquers a world."

EDW. (starts) Merciful heaven! My mother's dying words! Who and what are you?

REN. I am one of those whose life and labours are passed in rescuing their fellow men from the abyss into which you have fallen. I administer the pledge of sobriety to those who would once more become an ornament to society, and a blessing to themselves and to those around them.

EDW. That picture is too bright, it cannot be.

REN. You see before you one who for twenty years was a prey to this dreadful folly.

EDW. Indeed! no, no; it is too late.

REN. You mistake; it is not too late. Come with me, we will restore you to society. Reject not my prayers! strength will be given you, the Father of purity smiles upon honest endeavours. Come, my brother, enrol your name among the free, the disenthralled, and be a man again, (takes his hand)

EDW. Merciful heaven! grant the prayer of a poor wretch be heard.

Exeunt R.

SCENE II.—Union Square—Light up—CITIZENS passing during the acme—CHILDREN playing ball, hoop, &c.

Enter LAWYER CRIBBS, R.

CRIB. Now this is a lucky escape. It's fortunate that old Sykes, the miller, was in court, who knew me, or I might have found it difficult to get out of the Infernal scrape. What a terrible night I have passed, to be sure—what with the horrid noise of the rats, that I expected every moment would commence making a breakfast of my toes, the cold, and horrible language of my miserable and blackguard companions. I might as well have passed the crawling hours in purgatory, ugh! I'm glad it's over—catch me in such company again, that's all. Now for my design on Rencelaw and Co. I think there can be no detection, the signature is perfect. I'll get some well dressed boy to deliver the check, receive the money, and I'm off to the far West or England, soon as possible. Would I were certain of the rain of this drunken scoundrel, and the Infamy of his tiger-like wife, I should be content.

Enter Boy, L.U.B., crossing to R.

—Where are you going so quickly, my lad?

BOY. (R.) On an errand, Sir.

Enter WILLIAM DOWTON, L.U.R.

CRIB. Do you want to earn half a dollar?
BOY. With pleasure, Sir, honestly.
CRIB. Oh, of course, honestly.
WIL. (aside) I doubt that, if he rows in your boat.
CRIB. I am obliged to meet a gentleman on business, precisely at this hour, by the Pearl-street House, call at the Mechanics' Bank for me, deliver this check, the Teller will give you the money, come back quickly, and I'll reward you with a silver dollar.
BOY. I'll be as quick as possible, Sir, and thank you too.

Exit hastily R.

WIL. I knew the old skunk had money, but I was not aware that he banked in New York. Hallo! here's Miss Spindle a twigging the fashions; here'll be fun with the old rats. I told her half an hour ago, Cribbs was at a large party among the 'stocracy, last night.

CRIB. (after putting up his wallet, sees MISS SPINDLE) Confound it! here's that foolish old maid, at such a time, too. Ah!
there's no avoiding her.

Enter MISS SPINDLE L.

MISS S. Good gracious! Mr. Cribbs, how do you do? I declare, how well you do look—a little dissipation improves you.
CRIB. What?
WIL. (aside) She's beginning already. Hurrah! Go it, old gal.
MISS S. I swow, Mr. Cribbs, it's quite a pleasure to see you.
CRIB. You have all the pleasure to yourself.
WIL. (aside) She'll find out that by and by.
MISS S. Now, don't be so snappish, Lawyer Cribbs; neighbours should be neighbourly, you know. Who was it that had the pleasure to introduce you?
WIL. (aside) I rather guess I want that stick of candy. (CRIBBS stares at MISS SPINDLE.)
MISS S. Now don't look so cross about it. I think you ought to feel right slick, as I do. Now do tell what kind of music had you!
Were there any real live lions there? Did Colonel Johnson scalp a live Indian to amuse the ladies? Did Dr. Dodds put everybody into a phosphoric state, when they were all dancing, and the lights went out? Old Senator D—— dance a hornpipe to please the children, and make a bowl of punch at twelve o'clock? Did—— (out of breath.)
WIL. (aside) She'll ask him directly if the elephants played at billiards.
CRIB. Madam! madam! will you listen? (shouts out) In the name of confusion, what are you talking about?
MISS S. Why, of the grand sorrie—the party, to be sure.
CRIB. I know nothing of any party; you're insane.
MISS S. Oh, no, I ain't, neither. I was told of it by one—— CRIB. Told by one? Who?
WIL. (coming forward c.) Me, I calculate. I watched you, I guess.
CRIB. Watched!
WIL. Guess I did——so shut up.
CRIB. Confusion!
WIL. I say, Squire, where did you buy your new coat?
CRIB. Go to the devil, both of you.
WIL. Where's the tail of your old one? Ha! ha!

Exit CRIBBS R.—WILLIAM follows, laughing.

MISS S. Well, I swow, this is like Jedides' addle eggs. I can neither make ducks nor chickens on 'em. Well, I've got a good budget of news and scandal any how. So I'll be off back to the village this very day; this vile city is no safe place for romantic sensibilities and virgin purity.

Exit L.

SCENE III.—Broadway, with a View of Barnum's Museum.

Enter MR. RENCHELAW L.—crosses to a.—BANK MESSENGER enter) after him L.

MESS. Mr. Rencelaw, Mr. Rencelaw! I beg pardon for hurriedly addressing you, but our cashier desires to know if this is your signature, (produces check.)
REN. My signature—good heavens, no!—five thousand dollars, is it cashed?
MESS. Not half an hour. The teller cashed it instantly.
REN. Who presented the check?
MESS. A young boy, sir, whom I saw just now, recognized, and sent to the bank immediately; but the cashier, Mr. Armond, arriving directly afterwards, doubted it, and I was despatched to find you.
REN. Run to the bank directly; call for a police officer as you pass. I am rather infirm, but will soon follow; do not be flurried; our measures must be prompt, and I fear not for the result.

Exit MESSENGER L.

Enter WILLIAM DOWTON R.

—Ah honest William; I have been searching for you. Edward desired to see you.
WIL. Thank and bless you, Sir. How is he?—where?
REN. Comparatively well and happy, at my house. His wife and child will be here immediately; I have sent a carriage for them. Their home—their happy home—to prepared for them in the village, and I have obtained almost certain information of his grandfather's will.
WIL. Thank heaven! But, Sir, you appear alarmed—excited.
REN. A forgery has just been committed, in the name of our firm, upon the Mechanics' Bank.
WIL. Bless me!—the Mechanics' Bank? Who gave the check, Sir?
REN. A boy, William.
WIL. A boy—how long ago?
REN. Not half an hour! Why this eagerness?
WIL. I—I'll tell you, Sir. Mr. Middleton told me that Lawyer Cribbs, when the poor fellow was in poverty and drunkenness, urged him to commit a forgery. Not half an hour since, I saw Cribbs give a boy a check, and tell him to take it to the Mechanics' Bank, receive some money, and bring it to him somewhere near the Pearl Street House, where he would find him with a gentleman.

REN. So, so! I see it all. Come with me to the Tombs, and secure an officer. If you should meet Middleton, do not at present mention this—come.

Exit R.

WIL. I'll follow you, Sir, heart and hand. If I once get my grip on the old fox, he won't get easily loose, I guess.

Exit hastily R.

SCENE IV.—Village Landscape, as in Act I.—Mound and clump of trees R.

Enter FARMER STEVENS R., and FARMER GATES L., meeting.

STEV. Good afternoon, Mr. Gates. You've returned from Boston earlier than common to-day. Any news?—anything strange, eh?

GATES. Why, ye-es, I guess there is. There were dreadful suspicions that Cribbs had committed a heavy forgery on the firm of Rencelaw and Co.

STEV. Well, I hope, for the credit of the village, he is not guilty of this bad action, though I have long known his heart was blacker than his coat. Witness his conduct to the sweetheart of poor Will's sister, Agnes. Did you tell him the glad news that her senses were restored?

GATES. No, our hurry was so great; but his mind will be prepared for it, for good Dr. Wordworth always told him her malady was but temporary.

STEV. Well, the poor girl has got some secret, I'm sure, and she'll not tell it to any one but William.

Exit R.

GATES. Hark? that's his voice; yes, here's William, sure enough.

Enter WILLIAM L.

WIL. I guess he's taken the upper road, to lead all pursuit out of the track. Mr. Rencelaw and the police are at the cross roads, and I rather guess we can take charge of the lower part of the village; so there's no fear of our missing him; mind you're not to say anything to Edward Middleton, Mr. Rencelaw would not have him disturbed till all is secure.

GATES. Oh, I understand. How the whole village rejoiced when they saw him and his sweet wife return in peace and joy to the happy dwelling of their parents. Have you seen your sister, William?

WIL. No, farmer, I havn't seen the poor girl yet. Nor do I wish it, till this business is all fixed.

GATES. Ay, but she wants to see you; she has got to tell you some secret.
SCENE 4.]

THE DRUNKARD. 35

WILL. A secret!  Some of her wild fancies, I reckon, poor girl.

GATES. William, you are mistaken; your dear sister's mind is quite restored,

WILL. What! how!  Don't trifle with me, farmer, I could not stand it.

GATES. I tell you, William, she is sane, quite well, as Dr. Woodworth said she would be.

WILL. What!  Will she know and call me by my name again? Shall I hear her sweet voice carolling to the sun at early morning—will she take her place among the singers at the old meeting-house again?  Shall I once more at evening hear her murmur the prayers our poor old mother taught her?  Thank heaven! thank heaven!

GATES. Come, William, come, rouse you, she's coming.

AGNES, (sings without, R.)

"They called her blue-eyed Mary,
When friends and fortune smiled."

WILL. Farmer, just stand back for a moment or two; all will be right in a few minutes,

Exit FARMER R.

Enter AGNES, plainly but neatly dressed R.—Sees her brother.

AGNES. William! brother!

WILL. My darling sister! (embrace)

AGNES. I know you, William; I can speak to you, and hear you, dear, dear brother.

WILL. May heaven be praised for this.

AGNES. William, I have much to tell you, and 'tis important that you should know it instantly. I know Edward Middleton is here, and it concerns him most. When I recovered my clear senses, William, when I remembered the meeting-house, and the old homestead, and the little dun cow I used to milk, and poor old Neptune, and could call them by their names—

WILL. Bless you!

AGNES. Strange fancies would still keep forming in my poor brain, and remembrances flit along my memory like half-forgotten dreams. But among them was a vague thought that when insane I had concealed myself, and seen something hidden. Searching round carefully, I saw a little raised artificial hillock close beneath the hedge. I went and got a hoe from Farmer Williams' barn, and after digging near a foot below, I found—what think you, William?

WILL. What, girl—what?

AGNES. Concealed in an old tin case, the will of Edward's grandfather! confirming to his dear son the full possession of all his property. The other deed under which Cribbs had acted was a forgery—

WILL. Where is it now?

AGNES. In the house, safe locked up in mother's bureau till you returned.
Enter RENCHELAW, POLICE OFFICERS, and BOY, hastily L.

REN. Friend William, Cribbs is on the upper road, coming down the hill.

WIL. Boy, was that the man gave you the paper? (points off L.U.E.

BOY. (looking off L.) I'm sure of it, Sir.

WIL. Come along, then. Now, old Cribbs, I calculate you'll find a hornet's nest about your ears pretty almighty quick.

Exeunt R.

Enter CRIBBS cautious and fearful, L., looking behind him.

CRIB. All's safe—I'm certain no one has observed me. Now for the will; from this fatal evidence I shall at least be secure; (advances to the mound R, and starts) Powers of mischief! The earth is freshly turned, (searches) The deed is gone!

Enter AGNES hastily, and down R.—In a tone of madness.

The will is gone—the bird has flown,
The rightful heir has got his own!—ha! ha!

CRIB, (paralyzed, but recovering) Ha! betrayed! ruined! Mad devil, you shall pay for this. (rushes towards her)

WILLIAM enters, catches his arm, and holds up the will c—POLICE-OFFICER, who has got to L.C, seizes other arm, and points pistol to his head—RENCHELAW holds up forged check, and points to it, R.C. —BOY L, pointing to CRIBBS—FARMERS R.C.—Picture—Pause.

WIL. Trapped! All day with you, Squire.

REN. Hush! William! Do not oppress a poor, down-fallen fellow creature. Most unfortunate of men, sincerely do I pity you.

CRIB. (recovering—bold and obdurate) Will your pity save me from the punishment of my misdeeds? No! when compassion is required, I'll beg it of the proud philanthropist, Arden Rencelaw.

REN. Unhappy wretch. What motives could you have? This world's goods were plenty with you.—what tempted you into these double deeds of guilt?

CRIB. Revenge and avarice, the master passions of my nature. With my heart's deepest, blackest feelings, I hated the father of Edward Middleton. In early life he detected me in an act of vile atrocity, that might have cost me my life. He would not betray, but pardoned, pitied, and despised me. From that hour I hated with a feeling of intensity that had existed even beyond the grave, descending unimpaired to his beloved son. By cunning means, which you would call hypocrisy, I wormed myself into the favour of the grandfather, who, in his dying hour, delivered into my hands his papers. I and an accomplice, whom I bribed, forged the false papers; the villain left the country. Fearful he should denounce me, should he return, I dared not destroy the real will; but yesterday the news reached me that he was dead. And now, one blow of evil fortune has destroyed me.

REN. Repentance may yet avail you.

CRIB. Nothing. I have lived a villain—a villain let me die.

Exit with OFFICERS!, and FARMERS L.

REN. William, tell Middleton I shall see him in a day or two; I must follow that poor man to New York.

WIL. Oh, Mr. Rencelaw, what blessings can repay you?

REN. The blessings of my own approving conscience. "The heart of the feeling man is like the noble tree, which, wounded itself, yet pours forth precious balm." When the just man quits this transitory world, the dark angel of death enshrouts him with heavenly joy, and bears his smiling spirit to the bright regions of eternal bliss.

Exit RENCHELAW, leading BOY L.

WIL. Well, if there's a happier man in all York State than Bill Dowton, I should like to see him. My brother Edward again a man—you, my dear sister, again restored to me—come, we'll go tell all the news; hurrah! hurrah! (singing)

"We'll dance all night by the bright moonlight,
And go home with the girls in the morning."

Exeunt R,

SCENE V.—Interior of Cottage, at in Act the First, Scene L., everything denoting domestic peace and tranquil happiness—The sun is setting over the hills at back of landscape.

MARY discovered sewing at handsome work-table, L.—JULIA seated on low stool on her L.—Elegant table R. 2 E., with astral lamp, not lighted—Bible and other books on table—Two beautiful flower-stands with roses, myrtles, &c., under window, L. and ft, —Bird-cages on wings, R. and L.—Covers of tables, chairs, &c., all extremely neat, and in keeping.

Flute symphony to "Home, sweet home."—JULIA sings first verse

Flute solo accompaniment—The burthen is taken up by chorus of Villagers behind—Orchestral accompaniments, &c.

EDWARD. (without, R.) Where is my dear, my loved, my faithful wife? (enters, well dressed)

MARY, Edward! my dear, dear husband! (they embrace)

EDW. Mary, my blessed one! My child, my darling! Bounteous heaven! accept my thanks.

JULIA. Father, dear father!—you look as you did the bright sunny morning I first went to school. Your voice sounds as it used when I sang the Evening Hymn, and you kissed and blessed me.

You cry, father. Do not cry. But your tears are not such tears as mother shed, when she had no bread to give me.

EDW. (kisses her) No, my blessed child, they are not,—they are tears of repentance, Julia, but of joy.
MARY. Oh! my beloved, my redeemed one!—all my poor sufferings are as nothing, Weighed in a balance with my present joy.

EDW. What gratitude do I not owe the generous, noble-hearted man, who, from the depths of wretchedness and horror, has restored me to the world, to myself, and to religion. Oh! what joy can equal the bright sensations of a thinking being, when redeemed from that degrading vice; his prisoned heart bounds with rapture; his swelling veins beat with vigour; and with tremulous gratitude, he calls on the Supreme Being for blessings on his benefactor.

Enter RENCÉLAW, R.

—Respected Sir, what words can express our gratification?

RUN. Pay it where 'tis justly due—to heaven! I am but the humble instrument, and in your happiness I am rewarded.

JULIA. (going to RENCÉLAW, R.) I shall not forget what mother last night taught me.

REN. What was that, sweet girl?

JULIA. In my prayers, when I have asked a blessing for my father and mother, I pray to Him to bless Arden Rencelaw too.

REN. Dear child! (kisses her)

EDW. I will not wrong your generous nature, by fulsome outward gratitude for your most noble conduct, but humbly hope that He will give me strength to continue in the glorious path adorned by your bright example, in the words of New England's favoured Poet:

"There came a change,—the cloud rolled off,
A light fell on my brain,
And, like the passing of a dream
That cometh not again,
The darkness of my spirit fled,
I saw the gulf before,
I shuddered at the waste behind,
And am a man once more."
